ADDICTED TO RECOVERY

It's International Overdose Awareness Day.
Here's how Boston's events aim to save lives. 2

THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

FREAK LIGHTNING STORM KILLS 323 REINDEER IN NORWAY

A freak lightning storm has killed 323 reindeer in a remote mountainous area of Norway, officials said. Dead animals were found lying on top of each other, many with their antlers entangled, after the thunderstorm on the Hardanger plateau in southern Norway. "We've never had anything like this with lightning," Kjartan Knutsen of Norway's nature surveillance agency said, adding there were sometimes isolated cases of sheep or reindeer struck down. Reindeer tend to group together when in danger. It was unclear whether the herd had been killed by a single lightning bolt or several. Hardanger was extremely wet, helping conduct lightning.

CALIF. LAWMAKERS PASS RAPE BILL INSPIRED BY STANFORD CASE

California lawmakers, responding to outrage over the six-month jail term given to a former Stanford University swimmer after his conviction for sexually assaulting an unconscious woman, passed legislation, closing a loophole that allowed the sentence. The bill now goes to Democratic Gov. Jerry Brown for approval. He has not indicated whether he will sign it into law. The measure was introduced in response to the sentence given to 20-year-old Brock Turner by Santa Clara County Superior Court Judge Aaron Persky, which was condemned as too lenient. Prosecutors had asked that Turner be given six years in prison. He is scheduled to be released on Friday from jail in Northern California. "Sexually assaulting an unconscious or intoxicated victim is a terrible crime and our laws need to reflect that," Democratic Assemblyman Bill Dodd, a co-author of the legislation, said in a written statement.

TWITTER TO SHARE AD REVENUE ON VIDEOS BY US INDIVIDUAL USERS

Twitter said it would share some of the advertising revenue on videos created by its individual users in the United States as part of an expanded video advertising program. The microblogging service provider's Amplify Publisher Program is currently restricted to large companies such as CBS Corp's CBS News and organizations such as the National Football League and Major League Baseball. A user has to check a box prior to tweeting videos, after which ads will run on the video before it starts. "A portion of the ad revenue is then shared back with creator," Twitter said in a blog post. Twitter will share 70 percent of the revenue with the video creator, technology website Recode reported, citing a source familiar with the matter.

Communities battle the stigma of drug addiction to save lives

International
Overdose Awareness
Day brings public perception into the spotlight.

ALEXIS SACHDEV

For most people and their families battling drug addiction, standing up to the stigma is another hurdle entirely. The shaming stares and discrimination imposed by neighbors, friends, classmates or co-workers, in church or at grocery stores, is tangible. And painful.

From that sense of alienation was born International Overdose Awareness Day. Observed annually on Aug. 31, participants mark the day to mourn their loved ones without shame, and to offer education and stimulate discussion on the issues of addiction, overdose and drug policy.

Events designed to raise awareness are planned today in cities across the nation, from Quincy to Oceanside, California.

More than 250,000 Americans died of prescription drug overdoses from 2001 to 2014, the last year for which data is available. During that same period, 135,000 people died from illicit overdoses, which includes cocaine and heroin. In both sets, rates of fatal overdose have increased exponentially in recent years, according to the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

Yet as instances of fatal overdose are all too common, terms of discrimination against those battling addiction persist: "junkie," "tweaker," "druggie," "meth head," "wine-o."

"I think some of the stigma from drug use comes from our very outdated understanding of what problematic substance abuse is and why people do it," Laura Thomas of the Drug Poli-

Boston numbers

- The number of opioid-related deaths has more than doubled in the last three years in Boston, from 64 in 2012 to 136 in 2015.
- Middlesex County, which includes Cambridge, is home to the highest number of overdose deaths from heroin and prescription pills in Massachusetts.
- In 2012, 67.9 percent of adults admitted to substance abuse treatment programs were male, 32.1 percent female; in the same year, 83.2 percent were white, and 4.1 percent were black. 90 percent were unemployed. (Mass. Dept. of Public Health, 2012) cy Alliance said.

"We're taught a series of stereotypes — that it's distant, someone other than us — but also that [drug addiction] is selfish, irresponsible, and there are additional, often racist overtones," Thomas said.

Thomas, deputy state director in California for the New York City-based organization, said the phrase "drug addict" is often associated with the image of an African-American man, though the reality is that in the United States, most adults abuse intoxicants, whether legal or illicit, at one point in their lives.

To combat these stigmas, Thomas said, shifts in the criminal justice system and in public perception need to take place. First, addiction should be treated like a health issue, not a criminal issue, she said. And, much like increased acceptance with the LGBT community, there needs to be a change in the "public presentation," through high-profile people discussing their addiction and earnest discussion, she said.

Krisi Richards, a Hull resident, is organizing an Awareness Day event Wednesday in memory of her son, who died last January. He was 26 years old.

Though she's not comfortable with public speaking, Richards said "she has to."

"It's part of my deal," she added. "In my son's memory, I have to try to make people aware of drug addiction."

Richards is hosting a candlelight vigil at the Bernie King Pavilion in Hull. Speakers include a mother who lost her son just before Christmas, a dad whose daughter died, and a father and his two children whose mother passed from overdose.

There will also be people in recovery, as well as members of the fire and police departments.

Richards said to combat the stigma, people have to be open.

"You shouldn't hide," she said. "To end the stigma, you shouldn't be ashamed, [and] don't be afraid to speak out."

That's a message echoed by Barbara Edmonson, of Quincy.

"People are afraid. Parents are thinking that they're bad parents because their children are becoming addicted," said Edmonson, a program coordinator within the state Department of Public Health, Bureau of Substance Abuse Services, who's also organizing a candlelight vigil Wednesday at the Thomas Crane Library.

"Our theme [Wednesday] is One City, One Community. It takes a whole community to bring awareness, to stand together and end the stigma," Edmonson said.

Everett mayor writes to Uber CEO after another driver arrested

The arrest of a second Uber driver on sex-related charges this month has prompted Everett Mayor Carlo DeMaria to pen a letter to the ride-sharing company's CEO asking for stricter screening processes.

DeMaria wrote that these "two extremely disturbing incidents" have affected the community's safety and well-being.

Earlier this month, Uber driver Darnell Booth, who was found to have had an extensive criminal record, was charged with the rape of a 16-year-old girl, according to authorities.

On Sunday, Everett police charged 28-year-old Paul Griffin of Malden with several sex-related offenses after a female victim reported to officers that a man in a gray Dodge Caravan allegedly exposed his genitals to her.

The victim had previously reported a similar incident with the same vehicle and suspect in Everett, according to officials.

She provided police officers with the registration plate number and a description of the suspect. Officers apprehended Griffin after approaching his vehicle on Ferry Street, which then accelerated and turned onto a dead end.

Griffin was taken into custody after fleeing through several yards on foot and was charged with open and gross lewdness, lewd and lascivious conduct, failure to stop for police, reckless operation of a motor vehicle and resisting arrest, officials said.

"This is the second incident of Uber drivers assaulting women just in the last couple of weeks and we are still waiting for the Department of Public Utilities to implement new regulations requiring criminal background checks for Uber drivers," DeMaria said in a statement. "I once again call on the legislature to go back into session. Amend this legislation to immediately require thorough background checks for all drivers, and require fingerprinting. Clearly, these drivers should be thoroughly vetted and they are not."

On this day in 1899, the first car climbed Mount Washington

Now, the trek is a popular tourist trip for those across New England.

Drive around New England often enough, and you're sure to spot a few "This Car Climbed Mount Washington" bumper stickers. The souvenir serves as proof of making it up the highest peak in the Northeastern United States, a feat that got its start thanks to Freelan Stanley and his Watertown-built car on this day in 1899.

Currently, about 45,000 cars earn that bumper sticker each year, according to Howie Wemyss, general manager for Mount Washington Auto Road, a private entity which helps market the landmark, but what is now an iconic tourist pilgrimage began with that first vehicle to reach the summit 117 years ago.

Freelan Stanley and his wife Flora made history on August 31, 1899, when they drove their steam-powered auto, made in the Stanley brothers' Watertown shop, up the 6,288-foot mountain.

According to Wemyss who, at 65, has held the general manager position at the Mount Washington Auto Road for 29 years, the Stanleys made the trek solely as a publicity stunt.

Freelan and Flora Stanley in their steam-powered car, the first to climb Mount Washington. COURTESY OF HOWIE WEMYSS/MOUNT WASHINGTON AUTO ROAD

"They wanted to ensure their place in history," Wemyss said. "They knew it would be a huge newsworthy event, and it was. It hit the papers across the U.S. People everywhere knew Mount Washington and were fascinated a car had actually made this climb."

There are a few ways to reach the top of Mount Washington: You can hike the 6,288 feet, but set aside at least eight hours to go up and back, or if that's too long, there's a three-hour cog railway tour, which got its start in 1868. But ever since the Stanleys paved the way, the auto road has become the most popular way to experience the tourist destination. About 150,000 people in total travel up the auto road each year, according to Wemyss, whether in their own car or in guided tours.

"It's unlike any drive anywhere else, especially in the Northeast," Wemyss said.

Before becoming general manager, Wemyss worked as a tour guide and has driven up the mountain hundreds of times. Still, he said, it never gets old.

"It's different every single time you go up there," he said. "And even if you don't have a clear day, then you're up in this famous weather."

Among its height and stunning views, Mount Washington is most notable for its erratic weather. The mountain holds a world-record wind speed of 231 miles per hour, as recorded by the Mount Washington Observatory in 1934. Imagine experiencing that while in the first car to climb it, Wemyss joked.

The Stanleys also faced a unique predicament while making the ascent that thankfully tourists these days don't have to deal with. Since theirs was a steam-powered car, they needed water as fuel along the way. It took about two hours and 10 minutes for them to reach the summit, Wemyss said, (cars today can drive it in 45 minutes) but it would have been quicker if they hadn't missed stopping at a spring near the top. The Stanleys needed to get water delivered down from the summit to where their car had stopped in order to make it the rest of the way.

Those who work at the auto road are proud of its history, Wemyss said, and the Stanleys' story is a big part of that.

"We're always reminding ourselves of it because we surround ourselves with our history," he said.

China charges U.S. woman with espionage

An American businesswoman held in China since March last year has been charged with spying, China's Foreign Ministry said on Tuesday, the latest development in a case that has added to U.S.-China tensions.

Sandy Phan-Gillis, from Houston, Texas, who is of Chinese ancestry and is a naturalized U.S. citizen, was arrested in March 2015 and had been held without charges since then.

"Based on our understanding, Phan-Gillis, because of her suspected crimes of espionage, has been charged according to law by the relevant Chinese department," Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying told reporters at a regular briefing.

"China is a country ruled by law. The relevant Chinese department will handle the case strictly according to law," she said, without elaborating.

It was unclear what violations the charge covers.

News of the charges against Phan-Gillis comes just ahead of a visit to China by U.S. President Barack Obama, who will arrive on Saturday for a G20 summit in the city of Hangzhou. Obama is scheduled to hold bilateral meetings with Chinese President Xi Jinping on Saturday.

Obama's visit comes at a time of heightened U.S. tensions with China, particularly over Beijing's extensive territorial claims in the South China Sea, but also over issues such as cyber spying.

In July, a Chinese man, Su Bin, 51, was sent to prison for 46 months in the United States after pleading guilty to conspiring to hack into the computer networks of major U.S. defense contractors. REUTERS

Orlando 911 calls tell of fear inside and outside of Pulse club

Shooter Omar Mateen killed 49 people and wounded 53 at the Pulse nightclub in the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history.

Panicked callers to 911 during June's mass shooting in Orlando told police of buildings hit by stray bullets and wounded friends stuck inside the gay nightclub where a gunman pledging allegiance to Islamic State killed 49 people.

"Gun shots were just like crazy," one caller outside the club told 911 operators, according to partial transcripts of the calls that were released on Tuesday.

One neighbor near Pulse told 911 operators people were banging on his door to escape the shooting and others were seeking cover behind parked cars.

People reported on the carnage inside the club.

"One of our friends sent us a text and he said that he's been shot and he's in the bathroom and no one sees him," one caller told 911.

A woman told an operator her husband was in the club and he reported shooting.

"He told me he cannot get out. He's over there [and] he said he cannot get out," the woman said.

A man said: "I just got home from the Pulse club ... My friends texted me [to] tell me there is a shooting going [on]. A lot of my friends got shot."

The operator responds by saying not to text or call the friend.

Authorities did not release the names of those who called 911 or those who were mentioned as being inside the club.

Mateen, 29, was killed by police inside the nightclub.

He pledged allegiance to the leader of the Islamic State militant group during the rampage in which he used an assault rifle and pistol that had been legally purchased although he had twice been investigated by the FBI for possible connections with militant Islamist groups.

U.S. authorities believe that Mateen, who lived in Fort Pierce, Florida, with his wife and young child, was self-radicalized and acted alone without assistance or orders from abroad.

Maine governor may not finish term amid racism flap

Combative Maine Gov. Paul LePage said on Tuesday he would consider resigning as he faces a wave of criticism from both fellow Republicans and rival Democrats after leaving a lawmaker a profanity-filled voicemail last week.

LePage's latest outburst came after a newspaper reporter told the two-term, Tea Party-backed governor that Democratic state Rep. Drew Gattine had described the governor as racist for focusing on black people as bearing primary responsibility for the drug trade in the state.

"I'm looking at all options," LePage said in a weekly interview on WVOM-FM radio when asked if he would finish his term, which extends through 2018.

"I'm not going to say that I'm not going to finish it, I'm not saying that I am going to finish it. What I'm going to do right now is I'm taking one step at a time. I want to meet with Mr. Gattine and then I want to meet with my team at my office and we're going to look at what the proper steps are to move the state forward." REUTERS

After day of drama, Chris Brown arrested by LAPD

After Chris Brown put himself under voluntary house arrest while the LAPD attempted to obtain a search warrant for his home, the singer was actually arrested by the LAPD on charges of assault with a deadly weapon Tuesday night. Brown, 27, who once dated and assaulted Rihanna, was accused of pulling a gun on a woman early Tuesday morning. Brown and friends were at his home when the woman and other "uninvited guests" arrived. He then pointed the weapon at the woman after she and her friends refused to leave. She ran from the house and called 911, say numerous reports.

The police arrived at Brown's Tarzana home at 3 a.m., where they were unable to enter without a warrant, according to the Los Angeles Times. No worries, though, as TMZ's sources say: "[Brown] threw the duffel bag out the window, taunting cops and saying, 'Come

Ice Cube ice cold on Donald Trump

Sorry, Trump supporters, but the coolest person who likes him is still, uh, Scott Baio, we guess. Over the weekend, the bum landlord-turned-TV star-turned-apocalyptic candidate seemed to have corralled one key celebrity to his side: His lemmings found an interview with Ice Cube, in which the rapper and movie star appeared to sing his praises.

"Donald Trump is what Americans love," Cube said. "Donald Trump is what Americans aspire to be: rich, powerful, do what you want to do, say what you want to say, be how you want to be. That's kind of been the American dream." Yikes! But simmer down: Turns out his words were simply taken out of context. Soon as the Internet went aghast that the genius who wrote "F—k Tha Police" was stumping for a guy who said most Mexicans were rapists, Cube himself took to Twitter to make things right. "I will never endorse a motherf—er like Donald Trump! EVER!!!" he sent out. To which most Trumpees retorted, "Who's Ice Cube?"

Rihanna and Drake date night: sushi at Nobu, rose to go

We've known for a while that something's up between Drake and Rihanna. From his sentimental speech to her at the VMAs to their afterparty PDA, we'd wager at the very least he calls her on her cellphone.

In case you needed any more proof that the two are getting even cozier in real life than they do in the video for "Work," the rumored (read: obvious) couple was spotted last night leaving an intimate dinner at Nobu. Oh, and Ri Ri took her rosé, along with her Drake, to go, because that's how she rolls.

Ryan Lochte agreed to 'Dancing With the Stars' before Rio incident

Call it unfortunate timing.

The cast of the 23rd season of "Dancing With the Stars" was officially revealed on "Good Morning America" on Tuesday and featured some familiar faces. Amber Rose... Rick Perry... Vanilla Ice... oh, and disgraced Olympian Ryan Lochte. The swimmer, who most recently was in hot water following an incident report gone sour in Rio, says his casting was agreed upon before the debacle, noting, "I'm not one to make excuses, but I was still intoxicated. I was still going through the emotions of having a gun pulled on me."

The 32-year-old, who will be paired with dancer Cheryl Burke, is described as a "transcendent figure in the Olympic World" in the bio provided by ABC, but he was quick to address his past fibs during the morning interview. "I reached out to Jimmy [Feigen] saying, 'I know you had to pay that fine. It is my fault.' I'm taking full responsibility for this, and I will pay that back, if he will let me," he said of his 26-year-old teammate who paid $11,000 to leave Brazil following their crime.

But still — Lochte wants everyone to just get over it already: "Everyone's got to be sick and tired of hearing about this. I know I am," he added. "I just want to move forward and ... put on my dancing shoes. Or at least try to!" You can try, Ryan Lochte. You can definitely try.

Joe Jonas on life after the Jonas Brothers and those DNCE skeptics

"Time has made us evolve."

SILVA GABRIELA ACOSTA
Metro World News
letters@metro.us

DNCE is a musical injection to lift the spirits.

No matter your age, you can't help but move your feet when you hear the beats of this new group led by Joe Jonas. Their single "Cake by the Ocean" has more than 180 million views on YouTube and continues to dominate Spotify and iTunes charts as the arguable song of the summer. Amid a pop landscape largely dominated by reunions, this dance party-ready group that prints a fresh sound arose.

We chatted with Jonas and Cole Whittle, who along with Jack Lawless and JinJoo Lee make up the group's stellar chemistry.

Stunned with success?

Jonas: It has been incredible! I think we've been musicians all our lives and you know, the feeling of being together, the public reacts quickly and "Cake by the Ocean" has reached, literally, the entire world so quickly. We feel fortunate and happy, and that only makes us want to work harder because we want to be a band forever, we want to stay around for a long

What is the greatest gift that this band has given you?

Jonas: I think it has brought us much happiness in our lives, it's something all of us have always wanted to do: create music with great friends and enjoy doing it, with no pressure and no worries. We're just having a good time.

How serious are you when making music?

Jonas: I think we are very serious when music is concerned. We are happy people and we have a good time, but in the end we have dedicated our lives to become musicians and make music to reach large audiences and to be able to play in large venues and stadiums, we have worked all our lives for it. Therefore, no one takes our music as seriously as we do.

Some people would say that DNCE is a band that will not last very long, what do you think of that?

Jonas: Tell them to talk to us in 10 years. (Laughs)

Pop has been questioned in recent times, what do you think about that?

Jonas: I think it is going through a serious moment. I think there are many artists that are doing a type of pop that leads nowhere ... I don't know, so I hope we're bringing something different and fun, but something people will take seriously.

Cole Whittle: We're making music we like. It's pop, but with a different proposal. The four of us were walking down four different streets and we found one headfirst. That was the beginning of the band.

What's the difference between DNCE and The Jonas Brothers?

Jonas: I think probably the biggest difference is that we have grown a lot through music and you know, those moments when time has made us evolve, really. Many people categorizes us as a continuation, there are a lot of enemies who believed that we couldn't do things separately. The Jonas Brothers were left behind, but we continue to create individual projects.

Whittle: Musically, DNCE sounds like funk disco beats. Aesthetically, we are all very different characters and that is what is projected on stage. Everyone identifies with one of us, somehow ... we are like the X-Men or something. (Laughs)

What's next for the rest of the year?

Jonas: We will continue to tour playing as many concerts around the world as we can for the rest of the year. In autumn we will launch our first album, which makes us very happy. It will be like, you know, a set of new DNCE songs we cannot wait to play for audiences everywhere. We will release more singles, whether they do better or worse than "Cake by the Ocean," we are proud of the music we've created. The fan base is growing and we have a lot of songs to release.

If you could change something in the world, what would it be?

Jonas: Change anything in the world? You know, I would say that right now we need more love in the world. Therefore, I would say that the world should spread more love and less hate.

Geek Girl in Hollywood

I spent the weekend at my first convention since the release of "Suicide Squad," and I noticed something: There were a lot of children dressed as Harley Quinn. Now, if you've ever been to a convention, you know this is not surprising. Harley is one of the most popular cosplays out there. She's been a fan favorite since she first appeared in "Batman: The Animated Series" in 1992. There have been endless discussions about her. Personally, I'm a fan. The thing that gives me pause is seeing a bunch of girls as young as 6 wearing fishnets, booty shorts and jackets that say "Property of the Joker."

As creepy as it was, I was also very conflicted about writing this. Certainly I write often about body image and being comfortable with whatever you want to wear. Did I have a problem with little girls and boys dressing up as the Joker? No. Other villains? Not at all. Serial killers? Nope. As a kid, I probably would have wanted to dress up as movie Harley as well. It's a cool character design and not very difficult to pull off at a con. So, why does this bother me?

First let me say that I'm absolutely not condemning parents (or the kids for that matter) for dressing this way. I'm mostly writing this to find out why I'm so uncomfortable with it, when being uncomfortable goes against everything I usually stand for.

So, here's what I've come up with: It's not the fishnets. It's not the booty shorts. It's "Property of the Joker" that's getting me. Look, I have the jacket that says the very same thing. As I said, I'm a fan of the character. But there is something about seeing little girls dressing up as the "property" of someone that jars me.

When you see a kid dressing up as a serial killer, you think, "Well, there aren't that many of those." When you see a little Joker, you think, "Well, the likelihood is you won't end up in a place like Arkham Asylum." I mean, it could happen, but it probably won't. And it's not that I think that wearing a costume makes you like a character any more than I think loving video games or horror movies makes you violent. I do all of those things and I can't even kill a bug.

I think the problem is that domestic violence is so prevalent in our society. The misogyny women deal with online and in their real lives is an epidemic. The statistics are heartbreaking. I spoke with one person at the con whose mother had dealt with domestic violence, who said it was upsetting because so many of these girls will have to deal with this in the future.

So the conclusion I've come to is this: It isn't the costume or the character that are upsetting. It's how many of these little girls will have something in common with her one day.

The community group teaches kids to understand both justice and injustice. LAKE PHOTOGRAPHY

What do wee want?

Wee the People wants to help kids find their voice through art and protest.

Kids learn a lot about fairness — sharing is caring, etc. — but what about unfairness? How should children learn about injustice and how to speak up about it?

Last year, in the wake of the deaths of Eric Garner, Sandra Bland and Michael Brown, Jamaica Plain's Tanya Nixon-Silberg and Francie Latour, both mothers, found themselves asking that question. Looking for a way to take action, they formed Wee the People, an art series for children centered on the importance and tradition of protest.

"[We saw] our kids as a source of real uplift and positivity, in terms of finding ways to engage them around social justice," Latour says. "One thing that we came to understand and really try to embrace was that kids understand what's fair ... if they can understand fairness then they can understand justice, if they can understand justice, then they can understand injustice."

This May, Wee the People held their first event, a children's march: kids, accompanied by the Jamaica Plain Honk Band, marched through Jamaica Plain holding colorful placards that they designed. Earlier this month, they showed up at Jamaica Plain's Porchfest, hosting a drum circle, a story hour and an "anatomy of a protest" game, in which kids organized the timelines of historic protests — like the Montgomery bus boycott — into "phases," competing for cupcakes.

Latour says the series has as much to offer parents as it does their kids.

"A big thing for me was a lot of parents who want to have these conversations with their kids but they don't know how, and I have struggled myself," she adds.

"I would have never considered myself an activist until I had a daughter," Nixon-Silberg continues. "I realized, 'Oh my gosh, I need to try and find a way to make a better way for her,' and [the way] for me to do that is to educate myself."

Nixon-Silberg explains that Wee the People is about helping kids find the joy in protest without exposing them to some of the dangers of a real one.

"I have a three year old, a night march is not going to work for me and her," she says. "But we talk a lot about finding the joy ... it's about just being able to express yourself and say, 'I have this voice; I understand what's fair, why don't you?' and giving [kids] the opportunity to be able to do that."

On Sept. 10, Wee the People will host another kids' march starting at the Mattapan Branch of the Boston Public Library. More events are in the works; parents with kids ages 3 to 11 can RSVP for them on Wee the People's Facebook page.

"We have so many things we want to do, we're very impatient, that's our problem," Latour says. We hope to expand so that this circle can include parents who may know that something, deep down, is not right to try to find ways to make it less threatening and find actual words, tools, language."

Inman Square

Local businesses dominate Cambridge Street in downtown Inman Square. ALL PHOTOS DEREK KOU/YOUMIAN

LOVE WHERE YOU LIVE

This charming neighborhood has the best of both worlds.

MEGAN JOHNSON
letters@metro.us

It doesn't have the pedigree of Harvard Square, or the grittiness of Central, but Cambridge's Inman Square has no problem maintaining the loyalty of its residents.

"The heart of Inman is where Hampshire and Cambridge streets meet," says Rebecca Spears-Siegel, broker associate with Compass in Cambridge. "There are many restaurants and small businesses running down Cambridge Street from Hampshire where people go to enjoy everything Inman has to offer."

But with real estate prices continuing to increase all over Cambridge, Inman's sales and rental market is growing, too. That is, when there is anything to sell; the intimate neighborhood is in high demand.

The average list price for the past 12 months for a condo in Inman Square is in the $600,000s, while single-family homes sell for an average of $1 million. Most properties are condos and multi-family residences, as well as larger developer opportunities.

"Being walkable to Central, and the hopes for a Green Line extension to Union Square, have made it an area that home buyers, renters and developers have been watching and [are] eager to invest in," says Spears-Siegel.

Renters will have a better chance at finding a home in Inman, where a two-bedroom apartment will come in at a minimum of $1,800 per month. Alex Butzbach, 30, moved to the Inman Square area in 2011, settling just over the line in Somerville, between Inman and Union Square. He lives with five other roommates in a rented single-family house, and says the changing face of the neighborhood has been visible in the last five years.

"I don't think I could afford to live there without a bunch of roommates," says Butzbach. "The best way I can think to encapsulate the change is that the Johnnie's Foodmaster is now a Whole Foods. Whole Foods is great, but Johnnie's had charm and some connection to the area's working-class roots. There's another Whole Foods a mile away near Central Square, so it feels like overkill."

While the neighborhood isn't teeming with young families with $700 strollers like the South End and Jamaica Plain, Butzbach says there are definitely more young professionals than there used to be.

"It's pretty evenly split between the original working class families [mostly Portuguese] and groupings of communal young-ish people like myself and my roommates," says Butzbach, who adds that at $533 per month, his rent has yet to increase since 2011.

But the unique vibe of Inman seems to be what draws in new residents, and maintains the long-timers. Independently owned businesses that have served the neighborhood for decades are often favored by locals, who proudly voice their love for their hood.

"The single best thing about Inman is that it's lively but not crowded. The T doesn't go there, so it isn't mobbed like Central, Harvard, Porter or Davis," says Butzbach. "But it's also close enough to those places to be convenient."

Fresh out of Woburn, WuBurger's first city-based location replaced East by Northeast (RIP) in May and holds its own among its fellow fast casual burger chains. As an affordable option for the neighborhood's younger crowd and families, their standout is a chicken sandwich — thick, crisp fried chicken breast, on a squishy sesame roll, slathered in one of the restaurant's house sauces. Perfectly spiced waffle fries and a range of boozy milkshakes aren't too shabby, either. 1128 Cambridge St., Cambridge, wuburger.com.

When looking for a new home, it's all about location, right? But deciding between all the neighborhoods in the Greater Boston area can be overwhelming. Enter Inman Square: an almost hideaway neighborhood that straddles the Cambridge/Somerville border. There's bars and cheap eats galore, and all the more crowded, tourist-stop squares (Harvard, Central, Kendall) are still within walking distance.

Inman offers more than location too, like colorful townhouses that come equipped with everything you want in a home. Check out these listings currently up for grabs in Inman.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Are Red Sox better off without Moncada this season?

Boston will decide who to call up when rosters expand in September.

RYAN HANNABLE
@RyanHannable
sports@metro.us

Despite being in the post-season if it were to begin today, the Red Sox still have some clear needs on their roster.

While no major moves will take place, rosters do expand on Sept. 1 and with the Red Sox being off that day, and in Oakland on Friday, Sept. 2, they will get to add players who can hopefully help down the stretch.

For sure, the team will add to its bullpen with at least Joe Kelly and Heath Hembree to start. Also, the team could get Koji Uehara back as early as early next week. There's no guarantee any of these three players will work out, but given what has gone on with the bullpen of late, anything can help.

"I think we have some reinforcements that are probably better than some other organizations," president of baseball operations Dave Dombrowski said on WEEI on Monday.

With how good the starting rotation has been of late, they desperately need the bullpen to step up to keep them in games.

From a positional standpoint, the biggest question is whether or not the team will call up top prospect Yoan Moncada from Double-A. Some have thought he might be a candidate to be a stolen base threat off the bench, but Dombrowski noted he's stolen only eight bases in 12 attempts in Double-A, which isn't as dominant as he was in the lower levels.

While on the surface it makes sense given the lack of production from third base, it doesn't appear Dombrowski will rush the issue.

"Even if you look at Moncada, who, in my estimation, is going to be a great player," Dombrowski said. "He's going to be an exciting player. He's going to steal a lot of bases at the big league level. But he's learning that art at the upper-levels. He hasn't stole as many bases at Double-A as he did in A-ball. In A-ball his speed just took over. You're working with him, but he hasn't stolen quite as many bases yet at the Double-A level. And I

Yoan Moncada has had an impressive minor league season, but is he ready to make the jump to the bigs? GETTY IMAGES do think he will do that at the big league level, eventually."

It may be better served for Moncada to sit out the rest of the year once the Double-A season ends and get ready for the Arizona Fall League where he will continue to get comfortable at third base.

While Sept. 1 is never a time to make huge moves to a roster, the Red Sox hope they can get some life with the additions they will make over the weekend.

COUSINS, LANDRY WILL DOMINATE

FANTASY SPORTS

ADAM
alevitan@metro.us

The first freelance fantasy article I ever had published appeared in Metro newspapers in 2006. I never thought it could become a full-time job.

But here we are as I'm now writing my last fantasy article for Metro. Thank you to everyone who has read over the years, even those who reached out to tell me how dumb I am. I'll leave you with two of my hottest takes for the 2016 NFL season, fiery enough for you to remember me by.

TAKE 1

Kirk Cousins will lead the NFL in passing yards
The Redskins' run game projects to be more inept than it was last year, when they ranked 30th in yards per carry, 20th in TDs scored and 20th in yards per game. Feature back Matt Jones has major ball security, injury and efficiency concerns — which leaves Chris Thompson as their most talented back. His best skill

Can Kirk Cousins succeed up against the pressure of a contract year? GETTY IMAGES is in the pass game and that's where the Redskins' personnel leads us. Jordan Reed, DeSean Jackson, Pierre Garcon, Jamison Crowder, Josh Doctson, Niles Paul and Thompson are a formidable unit for Kirk Cousins to fling it to. This is a guy who already averages 279.8 yards per day in his 24 full NFL games. That would be good for second in NFL history, behind only Drew Brees' 280.7. In Cousins' 26 overall NFL starts, he's been over 300 yards 12 times — a higher rate than Brees and Peyton Manning.

TAKE 2

Jarvis Landry will set the NFL record for receptions

Under new coach Adam Gase, the Dolphins are upping their pace in a big way by moving to no-huddle as a base. They are also fielding one of the worst defenses in the league, highlighted by an inept cornerback crew. So if we mix those new factors in with Jarvis Landry's 110 catches from last year, we get a boost into the 130 range. On top of that, Ryan Tannehill's affinity for targeting Landry has only increased and Gase is encouraging it. Given how often Miami will be playing from behind and the high catch-rate Landry achieves by running routes close to the line of scrimmage, Marvin Harrison's record of 143 catches in the 2002 season is in play.

Aries Be logical. It's in your best interest to negotiate and to present what you have to offer without the help of others. Be your own person and do things for yourself.

Taurus Money matters will cause uncertainty. Go over your expenses in order to find a way to cut corners. A business trip will lead to information that will encourage profitable changes.

Gemini You'll face criticism. Approach whatever you want to do silently. Once you have worked out all the kinks, you will find it much easier to deal with nonbelievers.

Cancer Changes at home will add to your comfort and encourage you to entertain more. If you express your thoughts, you'll gather the support needed to reach your objectives.

Leo Bring about changes that will inspire you or make your life more comfortable. Put greater emphasis on personal growth and updating your appearance. Pamper yourself.

Virgo You must be realistic when dealing with changes you want to make to your personal life or domestic environment. Practical action over expensive alterations is favored.

Libra Take a unique approach when dealing with peers or superiors in order to capture attention. Don't let the actions of others influence you. Stick to your principles.

Scorpio Positive changes at home will encourage you to socialize and host functions. Your openness will surprise some, and will result in positive interactions.

Sagittarius Jealousy and anger will surface if you get into a competitive situation or reconnect with someone from your past. Avoid such encounters and focus on personal change.

Capricorn A requested donation or handout is best declined. You should invest in your ideas and in boosting your standard of living. Charity begins at home.

Aquarius Don't let anyone badger you into thinking you aren't doing enough or that you should take on responsibilities that don't belong to you. Offer help, but set some ground rules.

Pisces Don't let someone else's uncertainty cloud your vision or slow you down. Look at the big picture and use your imagination to come up with workable solutions. EUGENIA LAST
